ostvarene demokratije ne poznaju politički mobing, bar ne kao izraženu i rasprostranjenu pojavu, postsocijalistička društva i u novim društveno-političkim uslovima održavaju na perfidan način političku dimenziju mobinga, u čemu neretko učestvuju i moberi iz bivših režima kako bi se na taj način održali na svojim stećenim pozicijama. Postoji mnogo indikacija da ta vrsta prikrivene iako rasprostranjene represije postoji u mnogim sferama novodemokratizovanih, bivših socijalističkih društava sputavajući ih da postanu pravne i istinski demokratske države.

Confronting the communist past in Macedonia: New injustices in the name of justice

The fall of Yugoslavia has opened the door to the creation of an independent and democratic Macedonian state. With this opening, the Macedonian political elites have faced a great number of challenges. Among them, the issue which was particularly prominent was the confrontation with the communist past/heritage. Interestingly, over the years the Macedonian political elites had a completely different approach to this issue. During the 90s, the party that emerged from the bosom of the Communist Party decided to ignore this issue. The change of the government in 1998 contributed to the start of certain steps in confrontation with the problematic communist past in Macedonia. Still, such steps were undertaken too slowly, softly and insufficiently. In the end, such an approach of the Macedonian political elites has paved the road for facing the communist past to be misused for revenge and for political party purposes. Such misuse was performed after 2006 through the implementation of the scandalous process of lustration, as well as, by abusing the fate of the victims of the communist regime. The process of lustration especially through its creation and implementation, contrary to the recommendation of the international organizations, had produced new wounds and injustices for the Macedonian society. Additionally, providing moral satisfaction for the communist victims through the project called "Skopje 2014" was overshadowed by a great number of corruptive scandals connected to this project. Thus, the Macedonian story of confronting the communist past has become another sad story of the Macedonian transition – Issue abused for political points and financial motives, not for the promotion and provision of justice, reconciliation and democracy.

Lustraciona pravde u postkomunističkom okviru

Konceptualno, lustracija u užem smislu podrazumeva proces dekomunizacije, odnosno diskvalifikacije i isključivanja sa najznačajnijih javnih funkcija identifikovanih pojedinaca povezanih sa prošlim režimom, posebno onih koji su se stručno i politički kompromitovali u trećoj grani vlasti i u birokratskom aparatu. Postkomunistička lustracija predstavlja moralnu osudu sa diskvalifikacionom političkom logikom. Kao sastavnica postkomunističke tranzicione pravde, lustracija ne predstavlja kažnjavanje u krivičnopravnom smislu i primenjuje se samo na ona lica koja su svojim političkim angažmanom kršila ljudska prava. Moderne varijante uspešnih lustracija prostorno su orijentisane na države centralne i istočne Evrope, u vremenskom periodu sloma socijalističkih režima, što se u većini država desilo između 1989. i 1991. godine. Intencija autora je da primenom metode studije slučaja analizira lustracionu praksu u Gruziji, Poljskoj, Češkoj, Slovačkoj i Ukrajini. Izlaganje će biti fokusirano na motive koji su doveli do
